The abuse heaped upon Roosevelt in the newspapers nearly cost him his life, and yet every one knows that the country is full of ill balanced minds. What foreigner realling the papers during a political campaign would not believe the same sort of recognition in a scientific statement of the facts as anything that might have been more remarkable. There were a few supernormal phenomena in the case, but not enough to justify any theory. The central point of interest and incident emphasized was the hysteria, which will make the case classical against the judgment of laymen who are so ready to shout "fraud," where
